

Did you know... Silence isn't golden, it's permission?

Although teens close to their parents are less likely to engage in risky behaviors, ALL teens are at risk when it comes to drugs. It's important for parents to talk to their teens and build open and trusting relationships. The more involved you are in your children's lives, the more valued they'll feel, and the more likely they'll be to respond to you.

But what teens do versus what parents know are often two different things. The same is true for drugs and alcohol. The AntiDrug.com is here to get parents up-to-speed on what they need to know.

Ever wonder what the signs of drug use look like? How to build a lasting relationship with your teen with such a busy schedule? How to enforce rules without starting an argument with your teen?

To find answers to these questions and more, and to connect with other parents like you, visit www.TheAntiDrug.com.
